ZENO LIVE AND VOIP / MEDIA PLAYER

1. Manage Callers & Content

Many independent broadcasters used conference calling software to manage callers, but that posed challenges because it did not integrate with their software for publishing and managing media. This resulted in application switch, which was a lot for individual broadcasters to manage while also trying to conduct a radio show. The ZenoLive platform brings all these elements into one interface—allowing broadcasters to easily see who is in queue to go on air.

On episode 21 of Rock N Roll Love Letter, we honor the legacy of the amazing Sylvain Sylvain Mizrahi of The New York Dolls, listen to a brand new song by L.A. band 'Cheekface' and let all of the rock n roll weirdos loose ;)

Wanda O'Kelley Mizrahi writes on Facebook about her husband Sylvain Sylvain, "While we grieve his loss, we know that he is finally at peace and out of pain. Please crank up his music, light a candle, say a prayer and let's send this beautiful doll on his way."

THIS ACTUALLY WORKS - but ideally it could be better automated

- Broadcasts start at the :00 mark and end promptly the minute at :59 (Ex 6-7 start at 6:00 turn it OFF at 6:59.) You can turn off broadcasting, but keep recording if you'd like (let's say there's 1 more minute of a song left.) It doesn't affect your recording/archive but it gives time for the next broadcast to air. If you don't do it, the next DJ can't come on and it's not fair/can't work that way.
- Your song won't get cut off in the RECORDING even if it gets cut on the live stream. Ask Sheri if you're confused about this.
- If you're worried about your intro/outro being cut off, bed a few seconds of instrumental music before and after your intro/first song. There is a server delay so our listeners hear it a few seconds - a minute later than you pressed it, just carry on it's fine.

Music:

- You must feature a Bandcamp artist in each show. You cannot upload to the archives without this field filled out on your episode page.
- If you tell artists you're playing their music on your radio show / tag them on social media, they will probably give you a promo code so you can get it for free and be super excited you played them. Ppl really appreciate this.
- Keep track of what you're playing on the show. Either plan a setlist in advance or note down what you're playing during the show as you will need to upload this information to Mixcloud and Wordpress.

Episodes/Archive:

IT'S NOT A PODCAST AND THERE'S ALWAYS 7 BILLION PEOPLE LISTENING.

Odds & Sods:

- Sheri cannot tell you the listenership. Remember: it's not a numbers game. This is an art project / community station. People who love it - L O V E it. Sometimes the chat room is quiet, sometimes it's not. You will listen to the archives years from now and smile. That's what it's all about. If you don't tell people to listen, they won't. We aren't responsible for building your audience specifically, we're all doing it together.
- Do not ever call your show a podcast. Educate the people in your life and explain that internet radio is streamed live.
- It can be listened to On Demand later at kpiss.fm LIKE a podcast. But it won't ever appear in their Itunes/Podcast App because it's not an RSS feed. KPISS / you can't afford to pay the licensing fees for copyright music on podcasts.

TestFlight forever: Developers are building a better world outside the App Store

This club has everything: Cool unreleased apps. Hardly any rules. Endless mystery and tech cred for those who get in.

Apple built TestFlight as a way for developers to beta-test apps, but it's become something much bigger. | Image: Apple

By David Pierce | August 17, 2020

Jordan Singer makes a bunch of iOS apps, but you'll never find most of them on the App Store. Singer calls them "lil apps," and each one is just that: an ultra-basic tool for to-do lists or sports scores or news reading. All the lil apps are side projects for Singer, who works as a product designer for Square's Cash app, so it didn't bother him too much when most of them were summarily rejected from the App Store. "Apple's response," he said, "for the majority of them, was basically ... this does not meet the minimum functionality requirement of the App Store."

Singer wasn't interested in adding more functionality to his apps. Doing very little was the point of lil apps. So he did what a lot of developers are starting to do: He published the app to TestFlight, Apple's tool for testing apps, and left it at that. Anyone can download and use it, but you have to know where to look.
